PROBLEMS WITH USING SPANISH SPELLING

Some think it is a bad idea:

1. It depends a lot on the L1 language - if you have non-Castilian speakers in your class, they may have no idea of how to pronounce e.g. jiu (jew?), "c"
2. The "transliteration" depends on the accent of the speaker.
3. The sounds of one language do not match the sounds of another. E.g. to me, uer does not have an "h" sound like "where" does.
4. There are not enough letters or combinations to match all the sounds that may be needed. (e.g. s, z, ch, tch, sch, tsch.)
5. You confuse them, like "du" if English might be pronounced "deu" or "dew". Maybe "doo" is better.
6. It is idiosyncratic, depending on the author, and there is no standard.

Maybe it's better to spend energy learning standard IPA pronunciation and then the students can read any dictionary in any language. And after a couple of years hearing and reading English simultaneously, they'll learn correct pronunciation and spelling too, and they will hate the transliteration idea.

I would suggest using a rhyming website. Here are the words which rhyme with "do" <http://www.rhymer.com/RhymingDictionary/do.html> Get them to make a poem with those that they know! By Graham Tritt
