Partizip I

The form of the German verb called Partizip I (present participle) is a non-conjugated form of the verb. Partizip I is used as an adjective or adverb. It is not used as a verb or noun. In German, Partizip I is roughly equivalent to the -ing form of English verbs.

EXAMPLES OF ENGLISH PRESENT PARTICIPLES:

a fast running motor gracefully flowing gowns
the burning leaves some slow growing trees many laughing children several hard working people

PARTIZIP I IS FORMED by taking the stem of a German verb and adding the letters -nd or -end to the stem. The German -nd or -end is the equivalent to the English suffix -ing on the stem of a verb.

Examples of German Partizip I:

| germaninfinitive | verbstem | participlemarker | partizip i | englishequivalent |
|----------------------|--------------|----------------------|------------|-----------------------|
| laufen               | lauf         | + end                | laufend    | running               |
| stinken              | stink        | + end                | stinkend   | stinking              |
| lachen               | lach         | + end                | lachend    | laughing              |
| sein                 | sei          | + end                | seiend     | being                 |
| tun                  | tu           | + end                | tuend      | doing                 |
| knistern             | knister      | + nd                 | knistemd   | crackling             |
| flustern             | fluster      | + nd                 | flustemd   | whispering            |
|                      |              |                      |            |                       |

PARTIZIP I IS AN ADJECTIVE and must normally be followed by a noun. Partizip I as an adjective must take adjectival endings. Examine the following example German sentences with Partizip I and note the adjective endings. Partizip I is used as an attributive adjective, which means it is placed to the left of the noun it describes.

Auf der Hütte gibt es laufendes Wasser. Up at the cabin, there is running water.

Der stinkende Müll wird den Nachbarn stören. The stinking garbage will bother the neighbor.

Der Clown hat die lachenden Gäste lange unterhalten. The clown entertained the laughing guests for a long time.

Herr Reinert ist ein wohlhabender Mensch.

Mr. Reinert is a well-to-do person. (lit. "well having")

Wir saßen neben dem knisternden Feuer. We were sitting next to the crackling fire.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN ENGLISH AND GERMAN

VERBS: German simply conjugates the verb (never using Partizip I): VERBS: English uses the present participle in verb conjugations:

Herr Gratz kommt heute Abend zu uns. Jemand hat im Park gesungen.

Wir werden auf dich im Bahnhof warten. We will be waiting for you inside the train station.

NOUNS: German uses the infinitive as a neuter noun (never Partizip I). NOUNS: English uses the -ing form of the verb as a noun.

Das Rudern ist mein Lieblingssport.

Hörst du das Quietschen? Bei dem Schreien können wir nicht schlafen. Rowing is my favorite sport.
Can you hear that squeaking?
We can't sleep with that screaming going on.

Someone was singing in the park.

Mr. Gratz is coming to our house tonight.